SAINT BARTH CATA CUP:

AMERICAN VICTORY

The competition was stiff: world champions Oliver Backes, Misha Heemskerck, Jean-Christophe Mourniac, and Emmanuel Boulogne, along with a few Olympic contenders, were among the favorites in the 2010 edition of the Saint Barth Cata Cup. Held Friday-Sunday, November 19-21, and headquartered at Nikki Beach for the first time, this top regatta for F18 sport catamarans reached a new level of maturity, with a record fleet of 45 boats, and top-notch organization by Jeff Ledée, Thierry Lhinares, Vincent Jordil, and Hélène Guilbaud of the non-profit association St Barth Multi-hulls. Hats off to these folks for creating a superb event that reflects the image of Saint Barth in terms of sailing and style.

while Robbie Daniel and Gary Chu nabbed second place.

"We decided to come just two weeks ahead of the race. We didn't know we were coming until the last minute, then to come and win is exceptional," explains Casey, who raced the top mixed team. This year, sailing with Dalton Tebo, this American team dominated almost every course and of the four different races, they placed first twice.

"Fantastic sailing, fantastic people, and the most fun I've ever had," said Casey after the awards ceremony late Sunday. "The C2 boat performed very well. The conditions were really suited to our boat, with the high wind and waves and our teamwork makes us faster, although this boat is fast in all conditions. An all-around boat is all-around better. We were in front most of the time looking back at the fleet with their spinnakers unfurled, and saying 'what a view!'"

Daniel notes that the F18 cats are basically the same, com-

The two teams from the USA that placed first and second in this year's event weren't even sure they were coming until the last minute, when Ledée contacted them and offered shipping of their C2 Australian High Performance Catamarans (AHPC) racing cats on Bermuth Lines, an international shipping company. First-place honors went to John Casey and Dalton Tebo, last year with Carrie Howe, placing sixth overall and as plying with the class “box” rule. The AHPC boats are a little different in that Australian Gary Goodhall, who designs these catamarans, is also the boat builder and a sailor. “In this case, they come out of the box and with a little tweaking are ready to sail,” says Daniel, who is pleased with his second place performance. “The challenge in sailing here is to keep your mind on racing and not look at all the scenery.”

French sailor Mourniac took third place alongside Swede Kristoffer Johnsson, who lived in Saint Barth for many years and knows the waters around the island. “We did very well against some very stiff competition,” said Johnsson, who the first edition of the earlier iteration of the Cata Cup in 1993, sailing with the late Carlton Tucker, who passed away in 1998. “I’d like to present a trophy in Carlton’s honor,” Johnsson added, wanting to pay tribute to his former teammate and US national champion.

“In terms of competitors, the field definitely had a cross-section of the world’s best cat sailors,” said second-place winner Gary Chu. “The opportunity to race against that caliber of sailors is great, and Saint Barth is an awesome place to sail: the scenery, the water, the people.”

With the support of the Collectivity of Saint Barth, numerous sponsors, and a serious dose of good sportsmanship and camaraderie, the Saint Barth Cata Cup seems well on its way to becoming a truly championship event. For complete details: www.stbarthcat-acup.com

VINCENT RIOU VISITS ST BARTH

Everybody in St Barth loves a championship sailor, especially one with ties to the island, so there was a flurry of excitement when Vincent Riou sailed into the Port of Gustavia on the fabulous looking, bright orange single-hull racing boat sponsored by PRB (www.prb.fr). Riou had just competed in the Route du Rhum, a single-handed race from St. Malo in France to Guadeloupe (a major rum-producing island) aboard a new boat, the PRB 5.

Sailing in the colors of PRB in 2004-2005, Riou won the challenging single-handed around-the-world race, the Vendée Globe. He competed in that race again in 2008-2009, tying for third place after he lost time helping save fellow French sailor Jean Le Cam, who had capsized in rough seas. Unstable weather conditions did not help Riou in this year's Route du Rhum, where he finished a disappointing fifth, in spite of his new high-tech 60' IMOCA, which was just launched last March as one of the first boats built for the next Vendée Globe in 2012.

ing such top names as Michel Desjoyeaux and Isabelle Autissier, since 1992, when a skipper needed help to balance his budget for the Vendée Globe. Riou is the latest PRB champion to do the family proud and was duly feted in a cocktail party on the Quai General de Gaulle in Gustavia last week, giving guests a glimpse of that powerful orange boat anchored at the dock.

What about his ties to St Barth? The Laurent family, owners of PRB, also owns the Carl Gustaf hotel. They have sponsored various French sailors, includ-

The Russians Are Coming

A group of Russian tour operators and travel agents spent three days in Saint Barth, November 17-20, after a stop in Saint Martin. The goal of their trip was to discover the Caribbean for a future Russian clientele.

This visit to the island was the first for Maria Fatyuschenko, director of marketing, and two travel agents from the Moscow International Travel Service (MITS), the most important agency in Russia. There were also four representatives of other agencies based in Moscow and St Petersburg, as well as in southern Russia and Siberia. Welcomed to the island by Marithé Weber and Inès Choisy, respectively president and director of the Territorial Tourism Committee of St Barthélemy, the group visited various hotels and villas as suggested by the CTTSB and the Saint Barth hotel association. Their tour around the island was followed by a visit to the most popular beaches, a boat trip, and a walk through Gustavia.

Next stop for these Russian tourism professionals was Martinique and then Barbados. Their trip to Saint

Barth was the result of a visit to Russia last June by Weber and Anne Dentele, president of the hotel association, at which time they met with representatives of MITS.

L'Avion Lands In St Barth

Which logo best represents St Barth? One of the cleverest is the small airplane that adorns the L'Avion clothing line sold in Saint Barth as well as online at www.lavionstbarth.com. Norman Weinberger, a pediatrician from Connecticut, and his wife Susan Weinberger, a leader in the field of mentoring, are the driving force behind the L'Avion brand. Their daughter Lisa, a graphic designer in Philadelphia, designed the logo, which evokes the thrilling landing onto the island's small runway.

"Norman selects the new collection each fall," explains Susan. "Florence also loves the embroidered men's caps: "Pilots particularly love them," Susan notes. "But grandparents go for the children's clothing as souvenirs to take home from the island. What we love the most is that the residents on the island resonate with the logo and wear our clothing as much as the tourists."

In addition to the popular t-shirts and caps, L'Avion beach towels come in assorted island colors such as lime green, orange, Caribbean blue, white, and navy blue. There are also large, sturdy tote bags emblazoned with the L'Avion logo. "Travelers to the island buy the totes, stuff all their purchases in them, and take them on the plane back home. They also come in assorted colors," adds Susan. New items this year? In addition to chic new clothing for women, visitors to the island may be able to buy a little purse and mug to take home as well, as a reminder to schedule another landing with L'Avion in Saint Barth very soon.

Plasse then decides what she would like to carry for the season in her two shops, OutreMer (Gustavia) and Drugstore Des Caraibes (Villa Creole, St. Jean).

The men's and women's t-shirts are the most popular, with various styles and fabrics that make these shirts a cut above (including dressy black long sleeve, scoop necks for women with a discreet logo). Everyone

Wimco in a Party Mood

Fabienne LaGall, president of the newly formed Wimco SBH, and Laurent Edery, head of client services, hosted a cocktail party on Monday, November 22 at The Strand in Gustavia for approximately 100 clients and invited guests. Tim Warburton, Wimco CEO, along with his wife Julie, and other staff members from the Newport RI office were also on hand to greet guests at the first of a series of Wimco's weekly cocktail parties for their clients as part of their effort to introduce their staff and make their island-based new services known to the villa rental clientele.

Beautiful Italian Linens For The Home

From the elegance of the colors to the sensuality of the fabrics, the line of fabulous linens for the home that Elisa Bally has in her boutique in Cour Vendome (Gustavia) adds a perfect touch to bedrooms, dining tables, and baths.

Sheets in the absolute finest cotton imported from Egypt, linen towels, waffle-weave linen throws, crushed linen, and bold blends of new weaving techniques create a universe of textiles in subtle tones that alternate with luminous colors and skillfully faded shades.

'Society,' linens and accessories for the home.

The thread is custom-made, each piece finely fabricated, and then dyed. The know-how of the in-house colorists and the top quality of the materials add another dimension to the fabric. For example, the crushed, pre-washed linen has a reassuring lived-in feel to it, combining comfort with elegance.

These refined fabrics are the result of the expertise of an Italian weaver who settled in Lombardy over a century ago, in 1893. The high-quality fabrics of Limonta, initially destined for the world of fashion, eventually found their way into the best homes in Italy. In 1992 the company decided to expand its horizons by creating

These linens can dress your furniture as you would dress yourself, with a wide choice of colors to adorn your bed or your table: white, anthracite, chocolate... and natural colors such as lavender, soybean, tisane...

Not only are these linens a lovely addition to any home, they are also easy to live with...they do not require ironing.

What's Cooking At The Wall House?

Starting last March, interesting things started coming out of the kitchen at the Wall House, a portside restaurant in Gustavia named for the historic Swedish building next door. A new chef was in charge and the changes that began under his command last spring have been solidified into an exciting new menu this season.

Sylvain Noël is now master of the culinary experience at the Wall House, working side-by-side with the father and son team of owners, Bernard Tatin (now in his sixth year at the restaurant) and Julien

(year two). Born into a family of restaurateurs, Noël sharpened his knives and cut his "chops" in France and the Untied States (La Panetière in Rye, NY; Zinc in Lennox, MA), giving his traditional French roots a taste of the United States.

So what's new? Noël has let his imagination run to fantasy with such appetizers as the Virgin Maria. "The name comes from a Virgin Mary mixed with a shrimp cocktail and a Mexican accent," says the chef. The tomato sauce comes in a cocktail shaker and is poured over the shrimp at the table. "We wanted to add a touch of entertainment and personal service," Noël adds.

Red beets, one of Noël's personal favorites, have also popped up on the menu, in beet gnocchi for example. A roasted corn soup served with small strips of candied bacon is a nice winter dish but as Noël says, "it translates well to the West Indies." He is also partial to local fish and enjoys working with the island's fisherman, using up to 90% Caribbean species when available. He augments with fish from the Mediterranean, for example, turned to perfection on the rotisserie in the front of the restaurant or as a daily special.

"The duck comes from France," Noël explains, "as it really is the best. It is complicated to manage the arrival of fresh products, so you have to be a good at planning in advance. But if we don't have it, we don't have it." What they do always have is a multi-tiered dessert cart, with sweets to top off every meal, in addition to an expansive French wine list.

Where else might you find a timbale of goat cheese wrapped in tomato as an appetizer, or phyllo dough in the shape of a cannelloni stuffed with pureed cauliflower to accompany a main course. Served against the bright new striped tablecloths that give the Wall House a jaunty air, Noël's cuisine is surprising fresh and inventive. "He has created an international cocktail of world cuisine," says Julien. "People come here from around the globe and many are open to new culinary experiences."

With this new energy emanating from the kitchen and new personalized service in the dining room, there is a good chance the Wall House will now stay open all year, rather than closing over the summer. Noël plans a new menu as of May to feature seasonal specials. Now that high season is in full swing, a word to the wise: Reservations recommended!

BEAUJOLAIS NOUVEAU IN SAINT BARTH

Clients and invited guests of St Barth Properties had the opportunity to taste the 2010 vintage of Beaujolais Nouveau five hours earlier than their friends in France! Thanks to the time difference, we did not have to wait until one second after midnight on November 18 to imbibe. On the contrary, the bottles of this very young wine were opened just a few seconds after 7pm on November 17—when it was midnight in France—and the tasting began. The St Barth Properties gathering was held at the Cellier du Gouverneur in Gustavia, where some of the first bottles on the islands were opened to try the new wine.

The verdict? Wonderful... it was a good vintage with a nice strawberry flavor. Cheers!
