WEST INDIES REGATTA CELEBRATES FIFTH ANNIVERSARY MAY 2-5, 2013

Not an official regatta but a few days of informal racing organized primarily by Alexis Andrews, a sailor and photographer from Antigua, the West Indies Regatta evokes the spirit of the beautiful old boats that were once quite common in Saint Barth and throughout the Caribbean. The event is held each year in early May in Saint Barth.

In 2009, a fleet of eight boats included six Carriacou sloops—Ocean Nomad, Genesis, Tradition, Sweetheart, Good Expectation, and Summer Cloud—the Nevis schooner Alexander Hamilton, and a Bequia sloop, Plumbelly, the smallest of the fleet, but which has crossed the Atlantic Ocean many times. “These boats were used for trading in the islands,” says

Andrews. “The idea was to bring these boats to Saint Barth and show them off. Islanders were invited to come aboard and see how they are made, and to sail with us during the races.” The event is a reminder of the days when boats like these sailed in and out of the Port of Gustavia, carrying rum and fish to trade for cigarettes and alcohol.

“These boats have a certain style, they are very unique and different from modern boats. All of the owners come from very different walks of life,” adds Andrews. Tim Charlwood, an Englishman based in Park City, Utah, noted in 2009 after racing on Frank Pierce’s Tradition, a classic sloop that has been rebuilt: “The sailing was terrific with 20 knots of wind. This should become an annual regatta.”

In 2010, six traditional Carriacou sloops—Ocean Nomad, Genesis, Tradition, Sweetheart, Good Expectations, and Summer Cloud—plus the Nevis schooner Alexander Hamilton—enjoyed great weather and ideal sailing conditions for the second annual edition of the West Indies Regatta. “This is as authentic as you can get,” says Lee Davidson, an American resident of Saint Barth, who sails in the regatta each year and helps with logistics. “It’s sailing without any embellishment. These boats are the essence of what everyone did down here 50 years ago. This event is perfect for anyone who likes the water and West Indian heritage.”

In 2011, the guest of honor was the 180’ square-rigger, Picton Castle, quite the eye-catcher at the main dock, with captain/owner Dan Moreland, completing a circumnavigation of the globe with his student crew. The population of Saint Barth was invited to go aboard and visit this interesting vessel.

The 2012 event was dubbed the “Wet Indies Regatta” by organizer Alexis Andrews after a full day of rain and a total lack of wind, resulting in no racing at all. The highlight of the event was the appearance of Scaramouche, referred to as “the queen of the West Indies Regatta”: a traditional 72’ schooner built in 1969. The last of its kind, Scaramouche is based in The Grenadines, where it does day charters under the watchful eye of captain Martin Jeannett, who has owned the boat since the 70s. “It is the last of the genuine Carriacou schooners,” he confirms. “A real museum piece.”

The 2013 fifth-anniversary edition of the West Indies Regatta has a record number of boats participating (see full list) and the addition of a Caribbean artisanal market. Cargo coming on the various boats for the market includes: 100% Pure Bequia Honey from the Ambois Apiary; St Lucian virgin coconut oil; organic fruit, vegetables, and spices; chocolate from Pointe Baptiste; soaps and essential oils from Coalpot Soaps; Caribbean arts and crafts; coffee; cocoa; flowers; jelly nuts; Zaka's famous masks; and jewelry from Island Effect. Artist Aragorn Dick-Read from Tortola has organized the market.

Support for the 2013 West Indies Regatta includes the Collectivity of Saint Barth, the CTTSB, UNESCO, and the Port of Gustavia, among others. For complete details: www.westindiesregatta.com

SALT POND IN GRAND CUL-DE-SAC ASPHYXIATING

The “etang,” or salt pond in Grand Cul-de-Sac is polluted and asphyxiating as indicated by an analysis made at the request of the environmental association St Barth Essentiel. These chemical oxygen demand (COD) tests were done recently by Sanilab and display a very high level of organic compounds in the water: on the order of approximately 1000 mg/liter environ, yet when the water has enough oxygen, the COD level should not pass 90 mg/liter. “The COD is used, for example, to evaluate the level of pollution in waste water,” explains Pierre Harris, from the company, Eaux Barth. If 2000 mg/l is the maximum to not exceed in water from a sewage treatment plant, than “1000 mg/l for an etang is enormous,” adds Harris. “That indicated that the etang is sick.” A marine biochemist, Harris knows of what he speaks. “The COD shows that which is not biodegradable. This test is a good tool to measure the entropic impact on a site,” he notes. By entropic impact, he means the influence of activities created by man. No surprise that the pollution in the salt pond of Grand Cul-de-Sac, like that Saint Jean, more and more filled by silt, is the consequence of negative activities all around the pond. These tests also reveal the excessive level of materials suspended in the water samples: Almost 20 times above average. “It’s not so much the water in the pond that is polluted but the pollution comes from the sediments that fill the pond,” indicates Harris. In other words, this pollution is not dumped directly into the pond, but on land. And rainwater eventually carries it into the pond. There are two kinds of pollution here: Telluric, or earth, from a nearby excavation for example; and organic, such decomposing vegetation or dead animals. Or when the pond is used as an outlet for waster water “The role of the salt pond is to serve as a buffer in filtering sediment so that this type of pollution does not reach the ocean,” notes Hélène Bernier, president of St Barth Essentiel. “The problem is that when the mangroves are continually cut back, the ponds can no longer do their job of filtering. Pollution is starting to be seen in the lagoon of Grand Cul-de-Sac, where green algae is forming,” she warns.

DENGUE: THE EPIDEMIC PROGRESSES

With 11 cases of dengue confirmed during the second week of April, the epidemic is still on the rise.

dominant strain of the virus is DENV-4, which has not been seen in the region for several years, and for which the population is probably not immunized.

The dengue epidemic continues in Saint Barthélemy, according to a report published on Tuesday, April 23 by CIRE Antilles Guyana, the regional office of the French National Health Service. During a meeting on April 11, the authorities decided to put the island of Saint Barth on epidemic alert based on the number of confirmed cases. During the second week of April, almost 100 people went to doctor with dengue-like symptoms but according to the epidemiologists, only 11 cases were confirmed; the highest number in a week since June 2010. Yet during the same time period, six emergency room visits for dengue were counted, also an increase. The epidemiologists have pointed out that the

TRADEWIND AVIATION AND THE COLLECTIVITY: ROUND TWO

The legal battle continues between Tradewind Aviation and the Collectivity of Saint Barthélemy, with the case judged by the highest administrative court in France. The issue concerns a new regulation about parking of planes at the Gustave III Airport in Saint Barth, as adopted by a majority of the territorial council on March 15. This regulation limits the number commercial planes not based in Saint Barth from parking overnight: only two planes over 14 meters and two planes less than 14 meters are allowed to remain overnight. Considering that this regulation was adopted against them, as they are practically the only company to park planes overnight in Saint Barth other than St Barth Commuter, which is based at Gustave III, Tradewind quickly filed a suit to defend its right to do business and guarantee its economic survival. On March 28, they won their case, the regulation was suspended, and the Collectivity was fined 5000 euros in their favor. Yet the Collectivity filed an appeal to a higher court Paris, which decided that the limitation of parking at the airport in Saint Barth only concerned a fraction of Tradewind's overall flights and did not threaten the company's economic survival—and that the number of parking places allowed by the regulation was in keeping with the present needs of the airline. As a result, the initial finding by the local court was reversed, and the magistrates in Paris required Tradewind to pay 5000 euros to the Collectivity.

The 8th edition of the SB Jam Musik Festival with its free concerts on the dock in Gustavia, as organized by the association SB Jam, has changed its dates from mid-August to mid-July. Or more precisely: July 12, 13, and 14, 2013. Primarily to “avoid taking chances with the weather,” explains Jackson Questel, president of SB Jam. Last year, tropical storm Isaac made August a rather wet month. The SB Jam Music Festival puts the spotlight on all forms of Caribbean music, from kompa to reggae, by way of soca and zouk. And the ros-

MANU PEDRON, BARTENDER AT LE CARRÉ, WINS STOLI MASTER COCKTAIL COMPETITION

Barmen Sylvain de Rogez (Bagatelle), Nino Caballero (B4), Franck Rabbachin (Do Brazil), Manu Pedron (Le Carré) and Ludovic Lucas (Hôtel Guanahani) participated in the first edition of the Stoli Master Cocktail Competition held at Beach Bar at the Guanahani Hotel & Spa in Grand-Cul-de-Sac. Their challenge was to create an award-winning cocktail based on Stoli vodka. The jury comprised William Brevet (Stolichnaya rep), Didier Gréaux and Arnaud Famery from Segeco. Manu Pedron of Le Carré won with his "Kryptonite" cocktail made with Stoli Apple. This puts him in the running for the next level of Stoli Cocktail Master Competition in Jamaica, which takes place next week, where he will compete against seven other barmen from around the Caribbean.

Made from wheat and rye grains, in Samara, in the region of Kaliningrad, Stolichnaya Vodka comes in several flavors, from blackberry to blueberry, lemon orange, and peach among others: A myriad of flavors to taste "neat" or in cocktails, with a wide variety of Stoli recipes available*.

The members of the jury and the barmen at the Guanahani Hotel & Spa Beach Bar for the final of the first Stoli Master Cocktail Competition.

Results

- 1st: Manu Pedron (Le Carré), "Kryptonite" made with Stoli Apple.
 - 2nd: Sylvain de Rogez (Bagatelle), "Sticky Bagatt" made with Stoli Honey and Stoli Vanilla.
 - 3rd: Ludovic Lucas (Hôtel Guanahani), "From Ruchian with Love" made with Stoli Citron.
- Franck Rabbachin (Do Brazil), "Morocco" made with Stoli Orange.
- Nino Caballero (B4), "Purple Bubble" made with Stoli Blueberry.
- * Drink with moderation. The abuse of alcohol is dangerous to your health.
