Saint-Barth Cata Cup: A Great For Formula 18 Racing Cats

55 teams of two, or 110 sailors, are expected for the 6th annual Saint-Barth Cata Cup, which sets sail on Thursday, November 21. From world champions to passionate amateurs, we asked a few of these sailors to share their impressions of the race...

The 6th edition of the Saint-Barth Cata Cup sets sail Thursday, November 21 thru Sunday, November 24. The island has been getting in the mood since Monday, November 18 when the sea containers with the racing catamarans were opened at the commercial dock and the sailors were reunited with their boats. Once again this year, the roster comprises famous names, F18 champions, and amateurs who love the sport, for a total of 110 sailors. To ensure the success of the Saint-Barth Cata Cup, “we work hard to maintain a balance between pros and amateurs, explains Vincent Jordil, who wears two hats as race organizer and competitor, along with teammate Jeff Lédée.

“In fact, there are two categories,” notes co-organizer Hélène Guilbaud. “Those who participate every year in the Cata Cup and the pros. Of course some who are here every year are pros as well,” she adds with a smile. The big names this year include Franck Camas, official patron of the event, and winner of several Volvo Ocean Races, the Route du Rhum, and the Jules Verne Trophy— to name but a few. Also competing this year is Australian Darren Bundock, silver medalist at the Sydney Olympics, 14-time world champion, and Americas Cup winner with Oracle Team USA. He should heighten the pressure over the four days of racing.

Also on the roster is Lucien Cujean of Switzerland, 4th in the Youth America’s Cup, who in his first Cata Cup outing will sail with Kristoffer Jonsson (who knows Saint Barth well, having lived here). Another top pro is Emmanuel Boulogne, winner of the first Cata Cup in 2008, F18 world champion in 2004, and creator of the top-flight F18 Cirrus cats. “Manu” will sail with his twin brother Vincent on a brand-new Cirrus R. Back to defend their title are last year’s winners, Kiké and Keki Figueroa from Puerto Rico, while other returning racers include Patrick Carro and Michel Mamzer, who compete just for fun, plus Birgit Krahen and Christian Roux, who have been at the Cata Cup since the second year, along with most of the teams from Guadeloupe and Martinique.

The youngest skipper will once again be Arthur Boc’Ho, who will soon turn 15, and sails with his dad Frédéric (they came in 20th last year). Also, for the past four years, the Saint-Barth Cata Cup offers a spot to the amateur winners of the Gentleman Cup, a French championship held in Brest last May. This honor goes to Vincent Cuveillier and Nicolas Bouveyron, who will compete alongside the greats in Saint Barth.

“We come for fun. But with ambition.”

Lucien Cujean, Swiss skipper, 4th in the Youth America’s Cup Sailing with Kristoffer Jonsson, Team Tilt.

“We are coming to Saint Barth with much excitement and enthusiasm to participate in this celebrated F18 regatta. This is my first participation in the event, and my very first F18 regatta. And our first regatta together. We are coming for the fun, yet with a sense of ambition. To do well, we have to get the boat tuned up as quickly as possible to have the same speed as our adversaries. But our main goal is to enjoy ourselves. Especially with the water at 80F°... right now in Geneva it 41°F.”

Event

“The Cata Cup is a perfect format”

Manu Boulogne, winner of the 1e annual Cata Cup, World Champion 2004 Sailing with his brother Vincent on a F18 Cirrus R that he designed.

“As a catamaran addict, of course I am impatient. This year, I am sailing with my twin brother on a brand new Cirrus R. Vincent hasn’t sailed much since last year’s Saint-Barth Cata Cup. We will use all of our complicity, our desire, and our secrets to do as well as possible. I must admit that being on the podium together, with our own boat, would be a fantastic moment! The Cata Cup is a perfect format. Today, it has become a “must” event for sports catamarans. I checked three times to make sure my passport was valid. I have my license and my medical certificate, my bag has been ready since last year, and Vincent and I look forward to seeing our friends. Can you imagine the state we are in?”

“We hope to finish in the top 10.”

Frédéric Boc’Ho is sailing with his son Arthur again this year, the youngest skipper on the starting line. They finished 20th last year.

“I am thrilled to be participating in my 5th consecutive Saint-Barth Cata Cup. This year, like last year, my teammate is my son Arthur, who is the skipper. He will be 15 in December. In 2012, in the same configuration, we came in 20th. This year, we hope to finish in the top 10. We realize the very high level of the competition, with the participation of many big names in sailing. We can’t wait to sail with them, on this magnificent bay, in such ideal conditions. I would like to thank the volunteer staff in advance. Thanks to them, our vacation is unforgettable.”

Something For All Tastes

The pilot edition of the Taste of Saint-Barth, a culinary festival organized by the Tourism Committee of Saint Barth (CTTSB), showed great promise. And the CTTSB is already planning the first full edition of this event for next year. The idea is simple. Exceptional chefs are invited into the kitchens of various restaurants on the island by equally talented local chefs. For this trial edition, four hotels opened their kitchens to the challenge: La Case de l'Isle, at the Isle de France in Flamand, where chef Yann Vinsot hosted Martial Enguehard of Lenôtre; honored with the Meilleur Ouvrier de France title since 1991, At Taïno at the Christopher Hotel in Pointe-Milou, chef Lucas Leonardi shared his kitchen with Michelin-starred chef Jean-Jacques

Chef Yann Vinsot at the Case de l'Isle hosted chef Martial Enguehard, dubbed "best craftsman" of Frances Nogier; Chef Sylvain Revelant of Le Gaïac at the Relais & Châteaux hotel Le Toiny hosted Daniel Berlin, whose restaurant is considered the best in Sweden; and at Le Sereno Restaurant at Le Sereno hotel, chef Laurent Cantineaux hosted chef Amandine Chaignot, Bocuse de Bronze 2012, and head chef at Raphaël in Paris (she is also on the jury of the French TV show Master Chef on TF1). On November 9, 10, & 11, these culinary artists organized gala dinners in each of these four restaurants, with mouth-watering dishes from foie gras sushi to duck breast on fixed-price menus (75 euros without beverages). On Saturday and Monday at lunchtime, the four guest chefs were invited to taste the cuisine of the island at Eden Rock's Sand Bar in Saint Jean, and at La Langouste at the Baie des Anges in Flamand. On Sunday, they took part in public events as part of the Pitea Day celebration. On Friday morning, two of the chefs, Martial Enguehard and Jean-Jacques Nogier met with students from Collège Mireille Choisy, and discussed the various aspects of being a professional chef, especially with the three students who are culinary apprentice, and who had the opportunity to watch the pros in action on Monday evening. Maybe that will increase their appetite for a career in the kitchen, and to please the appetite of the island's gastronomes.

November 11 Commemoration

On November 11, 1918, 95 years ago, Europe saw peace after the signature of the armistice ending the First World War. This event is celebrated annually in St Barth with the placing of a wreath at the war memorial in Gustavia, where the names are inscribed of the five soldiers from Saint Barth fell on the battlefields. The wreath was placed by Lucien Couic, president of the veterans of foreign wars association in Saint Barthélemy, president of the Collectivity, Bruno Magras, Daniel Gibbs, deputy for the Northern Islands, and Afif Lazrak, secretary general of the prefecture for Saint Barthélemy and Saint Martin. A ceremony “to always maintain the sacred duty of remembrance,” notes Lucien Couic. Two students from Collège Mireille Choisy then read a message from the national veterans federation of France, of which the St Barth group is a member. For the occasion, the first flag of the municipality of Saint Barthélemy, dating from the 1920s, was brought out in homage to all veterans, since November 11, 2013 marks the start of a special year-long commemoration lasting through next year, 100 years after the start of WWI. This centennial will be celebrated around the world to honor all soldiers implicated in that war, as noted by the minister of French veterans affairs. His message was read by the general secretary of the prefecture.

On November 9, the day before Pitéa Day, Saint Barthélemy celebrated its Swedish history with a ceremony at the Swedish cemetery led by Nicole Gréaux and Nils Dufau, vice presidents of the Collectivity. Dufau is also the president of the Friends of Sweden in Saint Barth Association (ASBAS).

ALL ABOUT ART AND LETTERS

An exhibit through December 15, “Art, Text and Fire Poems,” organized by Art Saint-Barth, celebrates the work of Robert Montgomery, Jean-Charles de Castelbajac, and Blair Chivers, three artists, at Eden Rock Gallery, with a performance by Robert Montgomery, on the beach in Saint-Jean, on Tuesday, November 26.

What do we see around us? In the street and in public spaces? What signs are there in publicity slogans? Is there a touch of poetry? And what about objects that have aesthetic interest? These are the questions asked by Jenny Mannerheim and Philippe Combres, who launched the Art Saint-Barth Association early in 2013. Last June, Art Saint-Barth hosted Jean-Charles de Castelbajac, the fashion designer who showed off his visual art talents around the island. “The goal is to promote contemporary art in Saint-Barthélemy, by reaching out to the public, but not only in galleries, but by presenting site-specific work as well,” says Philippe Combres. It is in this spirit that Art Saint-Barth has organized the exhibit, “Art, Text and Fire Poems,” through December 15, with work by Jean-Charles de Castelbajac, Blair Chivers, and Robert Montgomery at the Eden Rock. Montgomery, a Scottish artist based in London, is perfect for this, as he was nourished by street art, and doesn’t want his work limited to galleries. As a younger artist, he began by writing poems on city walls, and the sides of buses. Today he wants to get his message on the maximum of billboards in every city on the planet, as his work is not limited by size. He writes short texts—verses and aphorisms—written in neon letters or on wood. “All Palaces Are Temporary Palaces” announces one of his works at the Eden Rock Gallery, where the letters give his work a sense of the ephemeral. Montgomery will do a demonstration open to the public on the beach, on Tuesday, November 26, after sunset, in conjunction with the opening of the exhibit. The work of the other two artists is in the same vein, with an accent on words. Blair Chivers uses engraved mirrors to reflect your image juxtaposed with a “positive thought” written in letters. And in the work of Jean-Charles de Castelbajac where the text is predominant. “One often wonders how to approach a work of contemporary art. The pieces in this exhibit have in common the possibility of a first literary reading,” explains Combres. Following the exhibit, the works by Montgomery will head to Florida for Art Basel Miami, December 5-8. As his letters also have a numerical value as well.

ROBERT MONTGOMERY

regime of the British Navy in the 1750s and found an anarchist commune on a Caribbean island based on a pacifist interpretation of Pirate law. They successfully sustain a utopian society based on no private property, free love, social care and care for the eco-system of the island but disappear from history. Some of their ideas reappear in California in the Summer of 1967 but without attribution to their source, or so the story goes.

I choose the text of the St Barths Fire Poem thinking about these rebel officer peaceful pirates and what if they really had existed. It says, "TO WAKE UP AND BE LIKE THE WEATHER, TO BE NO LONGER THE BROKEN HEARTED SERVANTS OF MAD KINGS". It's just the kind of thing they would have burned on the beach I think to celebrate the founding of their new Republic.

As an Urban poet and artist, used to the landscapes of big cities, what's the major difference for you when doing a performance on a tiny idyllic island in the west indies than the streets of London, New York, or Berlin?

Well, I suppose the major difference of being on an idyllic Caribbean island is you can stare out to the ocean and relive childhood daydreams of pirates, which I'm rather looking forward to. More seriously, I tried to select works for Art St Barths that touch on the themes of nature and ecology that run through a certain part of my work- for example the piece that says- AND THE TREES ARE SENTINELS OF SOMETHING STANDING BETWEEN THEIR BUILDINGS , BREATHING LIKE HORSES ALL NIGHT. I'm very influenced by writers like Daniel Pinchbeck who draw parallels between ecology and spirituality and see reversing our carbon footprint as actually a spiritual question and a karmic question.

Your work is bringing poetry to the greater mass through your public inventions and street hijackings. Why is it important to you to bring poetry to the public?

I just think replacing advertising with poetry is beautiful. Redressing the balance of the discourse of the city- the voices on the street- from signs that sell you even more stuff you don't really need to a different kind of voice that might make you reflect on interior things seems like a good thing to do, it seems like a positive contribution.

Conviviality And Professionalism Reign At Le Sereno Restaurant

This season, a new team is in place at Le Sereno Restaurant in Grand Cul-de-Sac, with executive chef Laurent Cantineaux importing the ingredients of success from two other acclaimed eateries: Juvia in Miami and Bonito in St Barth. His major assets are conviviality and professionalism for this beautiful spot on the edge of a serene lagoon.

Everything is new at Le Sereno Restaurant this season, the staff, the identity, and the menu for both lunch and dinner. The restaurant now carries the same name as the hotel where it is located: Le Sereno, where the restaurant was formerly called Restaurant Des Pêcheurs. Owners Ignacio Contreras and his children, Luis and Gabriela, wanted to best exploit the potential of this beautiful restaurant by the water's edge with infinity views of the ocean. The new team is led by Juan Carlos Perez Febres and Laurent Cantineaux, his executive chef, with a team that cut its teeth at Juvia in Miami Beach and Bonito St Barth, which has been a hit for the past four years. At Le Sereno Restaurant, they are surrounded by true professionals, including chef Mathieu Gourreau, with his brother Grégory Gourreau as pastry chef, as well as director of operations Frédéric Dubreuil.

The elements are in place for renewed success at the five-star hotel restaurant: “First we took the time to develop the project,” explains Laurent Cantineaux. “There are several clienteles, that of the hotel, and that of the restaurant, which come from diverse horizons: France, the United States, Russia, and more and more from South America. These are all different cultures, and we want to try to please all of our guests,” adds the executive chef. “With Mathieu, we wanted to enlarge our menu, with dishes that represent French gastronomy but updated, more modern. And we are open to more world flavors, especially from Asia,” adds Cantineaux. Sushi and sashimi are on the menu as well as grilled foods on the robata, plus seafood skewers—crab, calamari, scallops, octopus—and Wagyu beef. The restaurant has not forgotten its roots in Mediterranean flavors and still serves bouillabaisse, as well as risotto with squid ink, linguini with seafood, and bisque made from local lobster brought by local fishermen. The spirit of the Riviera is found in the chef's cuisine as well, since Gourreau has worked with Bruno Caironi and Alain Ducasse. An exceptional culinary experience is on the menu, for both lunch and dinner, in this majestic setting on the lagoon in Grand Cul-de-Sac.

WIMCO: A Policy Of Service, Service, Service!

WIMCO has spent 30 years building itself into one of the leading villa rental agencies in Saint Barth. The secret to their success: “service, service, service—continuously improving,” says Stiles Bennett, WIMCO president and COO. “If we provide a great vacation experience that is stress free, then clients are more likely to use us again, and refer their friends to us.”

Bennett notes that, “the villa rental market is very healthy, and villa rentals are up significantly VS a year ago across each month, and it’s both repeat clients and those people traveling with us for the first time.” He finds that client demand seems to be focused in two areas: villas which have been recently built or renovated, with clean modern design, full of amenities; and villas which offer a measurable value compared to other villas and hotels, and are located in good areas, with attractive views

In terms of sales, “the real estate market also seems very active and healthy,” asserts Bennett. “There have been numerous transactions. The market is not as transparent as what we are used to in the US, and information is not as readily accessible, which can slow things down. That said, the allure of investing in a second home in St Barth is strong relative to other islands, and St Barth’s appeal is international.”

In terms of service, Bennett contends that WIMCO has the leading edge. “We know our clients have many options. They can call any number of companies and find a villa in St Barth, so our mission is to provide such a stress free vacation planning experience that they have no reason to try anyone else. It starts with weekly product training sessions in our US reservations office, so we can answer any question about any villa we represent, and get answers about what is or is not available faster than any one else.

We have invested in developing interactive digital floorplans for many of our villas on St Barth so clients can more easily see how a villa’s rooms are laid out, simplifying the reservations process.”

Once a villa is selected, WIMCO’s concierge service team kicks into gear and helps clients book their international and local flights, their rental cars and any activities or services they want to book in advance. “Once the clients arrive here and we get them up to their villa, we want them to feel like we are always available to help them with any question or concern,” Bennett notes.

“They can call us with last minute requests for boat charters, restaurant reservations, babysitters, whatever, we will take care of it. In the end it’s the level of service we can deliver at all stages of the vacation, whether the client takes advantage of it or not, that gives the client peace of mind, and makes them more likely to travel with us year after year,” says Bennett, who notes “In most cases clients expect that a villa be in as good condition if not in better condition than their own home. They expect a clean and well-maintained home with a well-equipped kitchen, flat screen TVs with access to the channels they watch at home and clean towels and linens. They have every right to be irritated with anything less than that. Villas that fall behind quickly fall out of favor.”

WIMCO’s staff includes villa specialists like Bethany and Glennie who have been with WIMCO for over 20 years, plus a team of folks like them in our reservations department who have toured hundreds of villas, building a knowledge base that makes them the best in the industry in helping clients find the villa that is just right for them,” Bennett explains. “Then there is our St Barth team, led by Fabienne and Laurent, who have invested years of their life in providing great service to visitors to the island. We just keep investing in those people, and the systems that support them, building up their knowledge and capabilities, so they can provide amazing service.”

WIMCO also plays an active role in the community: “We do what we can to support events that make St Barth a distinctive and enjoyable place to vacation,” says Bennett, citing The Bucket, Les Voiles, the Summer Music Sessions, and most recently the Taste of St Barth culinary event.

64th Years at Le Select

On Monday, November 11, a crowd gathered around Marius Stackelborough to celebrate the 64th anniversary of Le Select, which he founded in 1949.

60th wedding anniversary

Maryanne and Bart Bezyack have been visiting St Barth for the past 27 years. On two occasions—in 1992 and in 1997—they brought their children and grandchildren with them. This year the Bezyacks are celebrating their 60th wedding anniversary, and what better place to celebrate with the entire family, they thought, than St Barth, which they all love so. This week the families started to arrive—from New York, New Jersey, Connecticut and California. “We spent much time at the arrivals gate at the airport,” said

Mrs Bezyack, “with children and grandchildren coming on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday. It has been a wonderful time for all to reunite.”

In celebration there will be an anniversary/Thanksgiving dinner held on the beach at Les Mouettes (where the Bezyacks have stayed every year). Dinner will be catered by chef John Paul of Island Flavors, and the 14 family members will attend, as well as some St Barth friends – the Gumbs family from Les Mouettes, Vivi Camille and Roger Dagniaux and their daughter Julia, plau John Paul and his son Stephane.

The highlight of the anniversary was the gift of a special two-volume photograph collection, compiled by their daughter Lori, that depicts the couple’s lives, from the ages of four and five to the present day. which was compiled by their daughter Lori.

On the first anniversary of their wedding, Bart gave Maryanne a single red rose. He has followed with a rose for each year, and this year Maryanne received 60 roses!
