Chikungunya Epidemic Continues

An epidemic of the tropical virus chikungunya, carried by mosquitoes, continues throughout the French West Indies. In Saint Barth, 83 cases have been confirmed by blood tests or are probable, while there are already more than 600 confirmed cases on the neighboring island of Saint Martin. Health authorities remind visitors to protect themselves against mosquito bites.

Published on February 7, the most recent report on the chikungunya epidemic confirms 83 probable or confirmed cases in Saint Barth, and 215 possible cases identified by doctors. Continuing to increase, these numbers of cases indicate that the epidemic of chikungunya, a tropical virus carried by mosquitoes, progresses. Of the various neighborhoods on the island, Corossol has been affected the most. In Saint Martin, where the first cases of chikungunya were noted last November, the epidemic has been “generalized” according to French health officials. As of February 7, a total of 601 cases had been confirmed by blood tests, with more than one thousand possible cases noted. The death of an 81 year-old person was indirectly linked to the virus. Health authorities recommend as much protection as possible to avoid getting bitten by the Aedes Aegypti mosquitoes, carriers of the chikungunya virus, as well as dengue. Wear long clothing at night and use insect repellent. There has been spraying of insecticides in the various neighborhoods of Saint Barth, as well as in Saint Martin. Similar to dengue, the symptoms of chikungunya include a sudden high fever and general tiredness, as well as pain in the joints, especially ankles and wrists. Please see a doctor in case of doubt, and use bug spray to best enjoy your stay in Saint Barth.

SPRAYING AGAINST CHIKUNGUNYA

In its fight against proliferation of mosquitoes carrying the chikungunya virus—which has reached epidemic proportions in Saint Martin—the Collectivity will continue spraying insecticides around the island as follows:

- Thursday, February 13 : Anse des Cayes, St Jean,
- Friday, February 14: Lorient, and Saline.
- Monday, February 17 : Grand Fond, Toiny, Petit and Grand Cul-de-Sac.

It is recommended to leave windows and doors open during the spraying. Also be sure to empty any stagnant water around the house, even in vases and flower pots.

Les Voiles de Saint-Barth On The Horizon

The fleet is shaping up nicely for Les Voiles de Saint-Barth, April 14-19, with 51 boats from around the world already registered, including eight spectacular maxis.

Proof that Les Voiles de Saint-Barth has continued to grow in stature as well as size: registrations have come in at a faster pace from year to year. With a few months to go before the 2014 edition, scheduled for April 14-19, 51 boats are already expected on the starting line. And among them are eight spectacular maxi yachts, skippered by some of the world's top sailors, competing against the high-speed IRC 52s.

Some of the boats are already on the way to St Barth by way of St Thomas, where the St Thomas International Regatta takes place a few weeks before Les Voiles de Saint-Barth. These include TP 52 Near Miss, owned by Franck Noel. French head of the Near Miss project, Benoit Briand says: "We have won practically everything in the Med with the high point at the Giraglia last May. Franck Noel was looking for some new challenges, something he hadn't attempted before, which would require a new way of tackling the races. The reputation of

Les Voiles de Saint Barth has spread throughout our little world and appears to correspond perfectly to what he is looking for, with highly competitive racing, some magnificent backdrops and ideal sailing conditions. Exactly the sort of challenge we were hoping for. So we have adjusted our race project. While Karol Jablonski will remain at the helm of the boat, a new top class afterguard will assist him with Marcel Van Triest as navigator, and world match racing champion, Rod Dawson as tactician. The crew will therefore be made up of more English speakers. We are taking the Voiles de Saint Barth very seriously and hope to do well there

Another motivated captain is John Hildebrand of Caol Ila R, a Mills-designed 21-meter maxi. Les Voiles de Saint-Barth is considered a must on this season's calendar for the boat's American owner, Alexander Schaerer, winner of last year's Volcano Trophy in the Mediterranean. "The Voiles de Saint Barth represents a new goal for us in a very different context from what we have been experiencing over the past three years in the Mediterranean," he explained. "Both myself and the crew are fully motivated with the idea of racing at this top level in a dream destination, which is famous for its fantastic sailing conditions."

At the rate that registrations are coming in, 70 boats should be on the starting line for the 2014 edition of Les Voiles de Saint-Barth, which will conclude about a week before the arrival of the first boats in the Transat Ag2r La Mondiale.

Five Classes of Boats at Les Voiles

The fleet for Les Voiles de Saint-Barth comprises five distinct classes: multi-hulls, maxis, IRC 52, and a contingent of modern racing cruisers divided into two groups, spinnakers and non spinnakers, in order to include the largest possible number of amateurs in the race. The organizers promise a good show on land as well as at sea, with numerous activities at the race village on the dock in Gustavia.

PIPER AZTEC ACCIDENT BETWEEN SAINT MARTIN AND SAINT BARTH

A small private plane carrying three passengers landed in the sea just a few minutes after takeoff from Saint-Martin Grand-Case, on January 27 at around 4:45pm. Fortunately there were no fatalities.

For a reason as yet undetermined, the twin-engine Piper Aztec 23 lost power to both engines. The plane was still in Saint Martin airspace and remained in radio contact with the tower in Grand Case. The pilot tried—and succeeded—to land on the somewhat agitated seas, two nautical miles from the coast Guana Bay.

The passengers were able to exit the plane, and were eventually recovered by the Voyager3 Dreamliner ferry, which had taken a detour from its usual route after hearing about the accident from the CROSS Antilles

Guyana. Adrift in the ocean for almost two hours, the two men and one woman were lucky in that they only suffered from slight contusions and minor fractures. They were taken to the Sint Maarten Medical Center aboard the Sint Maarten rescue boat.

The NTSB (National

Transportation Safety Board) will lead an inquiry into the accident, as the plane in question was registered in the United States and the crash took place in the waters of Sint Maarten.

The French Bureau of Inquiries and Analyses (BEA) might also be called upon for support.

I Love Valentine's Day At La Plage

What could be more romantic than a fabulous "I Love Friday" dinner and entertainment at La Plage, especially on Friday, February 14 for Valentine's Day, with Stefan Biniak in the house.

"I Love Friday!" evenings at La Plage take over the beachfront restaurant, starting with a delicious meal—the menu at La Plage has influences from French roots as well as Caribbean accents. Music plays a large role in the evening's festivities; La Plage handpicks musicians and DJs to keep guests dancing between bites. From German deep house to Brazilian nu-disco and Brooklyn electro, the sounds run the gamut but are guaranteed to have guests moving all night long. Other live entertainment includes artistic pole dancing performed by master dancer Cristina Furlan whose strength and grace amazes fans around the world, and fire shows performed by Cyril that involve fire twirling, throwing and dancing that once you see, will never forget. Guests will have the sand on their feet and the salty sea breeze on their face as they finish dinner and head to the dance floor where dim blue and white lighting give the restaurant and beach an ethereal glow.

With a full moon on Friday, February 14 to make Valentine's Day even more romantic, the "I Love Friday" vibe is amplified by becoming a White Party, where guests are encouraged to dress all in white and dance under the full moon. This will be just the thing to do on Valentine's Day with DJ Stefan Biniak as guest star.

Biniak took the music industry by storm with his progressive, melodic, and incredibly sexy sounds. A Berlin-based DJ, Biniak is part of the famous German melting pot, letting his eclectic and melodic music do all the talking.

His "Read All About It" clip has had over 11 million views on YouTube; giving him the respect and appreciation he deserves. World-famous DJ Tiesto became a big fan of Stefan's, which led to them playing a gig together at his event in Amsterdam.

Biniak has succeeded in putting his name on the map amongst some of the world's most famous DJs in a very short period of time. In 2013 alone his career flourished exponentially; playing at some of the most popular clubs and festivals throughout Europe along famous DJs such as Purple Disco Machine, Superflu, Kellerkind and Aka Aka. He also brought his magic vibe to La Plage during the St Barth Summer Sessions in 2013...and really killed it!

In 2014 Biniak will also be playing at the SonneMondSterne festival for the first time along famous DJs Deadmau5, Fatboy Slim, Calvin Harris, Steve Aoki Live, The Bloody Beetroots, Solomun, Marek Hemmann, Oliver Koletzki, Niconé, Andhim, , Alle Farben, HVOB, Dirty Doering... to name a few!

Biniak's soulful melodies know no bounds just like man behind the music who cannot be removed from the DJ decks once he takes the stage. His music is a unique fusion of electronica; a production of deep house music paired with sweet-sounding vocals and melodic areas. He transports his audience on a musical journey with his emotional and exclusively diverse sounds. He is a true representation of his own sound; playing producing with an obvious and unique dedication.

Alain Le Chatelier : From Arcimboldo to St Barth

*Ellen Lampert-Gréaux

A classical painter trained in Paris, Alain Le Chatelier is back for his annual show at Les Artisans in Gustavia with two collections of new work. The first is a series of paintings that are channeling the spirit of Giuseppe Arcimboldo, a 16th-century Italian painter, known for his optical illusions.

With the same technical skills of trompe-l'œil displayed by Arcimboldo, Le Chatelier has done a series of small paintings that can be turned upside down... in one direction they are faces, in the other direction baskets of fruits and vegetables... a carrot and zucchini becomes noses, chestnuts turn into eyes, a head of cabbage becomes a face with cabbage leaves as a bonnet. Colanders become hats, the chocolate in pain-au-chocolate become eyes in a basket of baked goods that flips to become "Mr. Bread," whose hair is tresses of golden wheat. In a self-portrait of the artist, a whipped cream beard with a pearl at the bottom and a strawberry nose can be turned to reveal a lush dessert with berries and cream, tempting enough to eat.

The second series of new paintings are of Saint Barth, which accent the artist's fascination with the flora and fauna of the island. "I did a series of pencil sketches when I was here last year that I could work on at home," explains Le Chatelier. These paintings include scenes of Toiny, Saline, and St Jean, studded with deep greens, blues, and purples, as the sky melts into the sea and rock formations loom in the background. A painting of the airport has small planes coming and going, while other paintings embrace the island's salt ponds, with hummingbirds, yellow birds, and butterflies flitting around aloe, cactus, and lilies, with shells, coral, sea urchins, and pearly pink conch shells adding to the landscaped. "The plants are as realistic as possible in terms of their morphology," says Le Chatelier, whose Saint Barth paintings comprise an abundance of blues and greens. "That's how I see the island," he says. "That's how it is, especially after the grays of Paris."

One of the new paintings is a very personal double portrait of the artist and his partner, architect Roland Pichon. The scene is their home in the village of Bérulle in the French countryside. The village cathedral can be seen out of a window and its reflection echoes in the glass. Both men are enveloped in large bouquets of flowers, with various shades of purple, pink, and blue, so that you mainly see their faces. The painter's palette appears along with glasses filled with colored pencils and brushes. A bowl of coffee is ready to drink.

As is often the case, Le Chatelier's new work exhibits his sense of hyper-reality mixed with a dose of fantasy and a splash of humor. There is often an interesting angle, as if the viewer was a bird flying over the scenery and gliding down toward the sea. And as always, the closer you look, the more you see!

A Return To Nature

Art Saint-Barth presents the work of American artist Lola Montes Schnabel at Eden Rock Gallery, through February 28, 2014. Twenty canvases display a violent harmony of colors, with which the daughter of Julian Schnabel proves her unique artistic talent.

Before I could speak, I could draw," explains Lola Montes Schnabel. As far as art is concerned, she certainly learned at the knee of an excellent master. She is the oldest daughter of American filmmaker and neo-expressionist painter Julian Schnabel (whose films include Basquiat, Before Night Falls, and

The Diving Bell and the Butterfly) and clothing designer Jacqueline Beurang. Lola Montes Schnabel was born in 1981, in New York, in the heart of the avant-garde movement. She grew up in the Chelsea Hotel, where various artists such as Bob Dylan, Sid Vicious, Janis Joplin (who died in 1970), and Andy Warhol all lived at one point or another. With her father, Lola learned to paint, discovered photography and the movies. She spent her free time experimenting in a lifestyle unfettered by the constraints society can impose. A liberty that might offer its own dangers, cause its own torments. Painting became the means to express these sentiments. If Lola's canvases resemble those of her father, it is by their sharp, sometimes violent palette, which is remarkably harmonious. But Lola's work reveals her unique, personal talent. She graduated from Cooper Union, an art school in Lower Manhattan, in 2008, and has already had exhibits in galleries in New York, Los Angeles, among others. And now in Saint Barth, at Eden Rock Gallery thanks to the association, Art Saint-Barth, run by Philippe Combres and Jenny Mannerheim.

Rocking with the Tremendous

Way back in 1987, a few friends got together to play some music at Le Select, and a legend was born: The Tremendous Johnson Blues Band. “Leo, the guitar player, and I are the only surviving members. We know each other through his wife Marty, she and I went to summer camp together, and that first year we cast about for musicians...” says Nick Sadovnikoff, who is an anesthesiologist in Boston. That is one of the secrets of this band: not one of its members is a full-time professional musician. The other secret is that they only play together once a year, in Saint Barth, during their mid-February vacation. This requires some communication among the band members to make sure they are all on the island at the same time. Last year they deviated from the norm and had a second slot, then they came back to play during Les Voiles de Saint Barth in April.

In addition to doctor Nick, the band comprises: Leo McLaughlin

(guitar) who is a construction foreman in Baltimore; Brett Gardner (guitar/also with the band almost since almost the beginning) who is a carpenter in NYC; Ted Mortimer (guitar), a financial manager for fitness club in Vermont; Henry “Hoppy” Hopkins (drums & vocals), a silversmith in Baltimore, Linda Nelson (vocals), a dessert chef in Baltimore and Hoppy's girlfriend; Linda Mortimer (vocals) a yoga teacher in Vermont and Ted's wife; and on bass, Mathurin Cagan, a St Barth musician and taxi driver. "He supplies some of the PA and I store some of the speakers and amps on the island," adds Sadovnikoff.

Rumor has it that Leo McLaughlin was responsible for the name of the band. "The joke was that Tremendous was back at the hotel with a hangover but his band always came to the gig," says Sadovnikoff. "Over the years we have become a bit more rehearsed than spontaneous...we play a lot of blues and reggae... nobody plays as a full-time job, but Leo and Hoppy play sometimes in Baltimore. It's a great way of having a joint activity as part of our vacation, and we dream up a few news songs each year to keep it fresh."

So far this year, the band has played at Gustav and Le Grain de Sel, with people pushing back the tables to dance up a storm. The next gig is scheduled for Le Select on Saturday evening, February 15. Keep your ear to the ground for news of other appearances... guaranteed to be fun!
