New Species Seen In Waters Around St Barth

In its most recent newsletter, the Territorial Environmental Agency (ATE) noted the sighting of a group of 10 juveniles of the fish species micropogonias furnieri, or whitemouth croaker. “This species had not been seen before in Saint Barthélemy or other Petites Antilles islands. The photographs and videos taken that day are also the only ones known of such specimens in our waters,” explains the ATE.

Route du Rhum Boats At Les Voiles

©Christophe Jouany / VDSB

In less than three months, in mid-April, the 10th edition of Les Voiles de Saint-Barth will set sail. Among the 50 entries are several boats that participated in the 2018 Route du Rhum.

Expected in the Rhum Mono category is Marseille architect Nicolas Magnan at the helm of Javelot, which arrived in eighth place in Guadeloupe after a difficult 30-day transatlantic crossing.

Keep an eye out for such multihull entries as: Class winner in the Rhum Multi category, the 15-meter trimaran Olmix, whose French captain Pierre Antoine offered emergency help to Lalou Roucayrol after he capsized in mid-Atlantic; and the 50-ft trimaran Rayon Vert, which Alain Delhumeau finished seventh in the same category; along with Bertrand De Broc's catamaran, Pampero; and Christian Guyader with Guyader Gastronomie in 11th place, but which stood out last year by winning first place in the IMRR Multihull class at Les des Voiles de St. Barth Richard Mille.

And from the Multi 50 class at the Route du Rhum, where he took fourth place, Gilles Lamiré with French Tech Caribos, will sail once again in the IMRR Multihull class.

Art In The Spotlight Again

An association of local artists with 50 members, a museum with exhibits by such names as Ellsworth Kelly and Jasper Johns, galleries such as Les Artisans, pop up art parties, art & food markets... and now the first Art Week. This initiative is the brainchild of the Tourism Committee and the artists association, with the goal of making the island an outpost for contemporary art in the Caribbean. Another reason for upscale tourists to come here... the beaches, the food, the art!

The first Art Week runs February 4-9 and focuses on photography, with five exhibits by five photographers in five of the island's five-star hotels. Details are in this issue of The Weekly, including the schedule of evening events that showcase the photographers individually.

Also on the horizon is the annual fundraising luncheon organized by the Saint Barth International Property Owners Association, as a way for the group to give back to the island. So if you are on the island on Friday, February 15, the luncheon will be at Tamarin and proceeds go to FEMUR, an organization that buys medical equipment for the local hospital. More info in this issue...

I hope to see you at the luncheon, as well as at Art Week... February is once again shaping up to be a busy month!

Monthly Sunday Market In Gustavia

A wonderful new island tradition is the Saint Barth Market held the first Sunday of every month in Gustavia on Rue Général-de-Gaulle (the cobblestone street running from Le Select toward Les Artisans). Organized by the Collectivité, the first of these open-air Sunday markets was held last April and was an immediate success with the local population, as well as with tourists. Shop owners and artisans present their wares, and the long line of cars heading into town creates a traffic jam (better to park on the outskirts and walk a bit). What can one find at this market? Generally speaking, the most popular stands are those of the bakeries, which sell bread, brioche, and pastry, while the traditional West Indian cuisine from Cré'age and vegan specialties by Alice always attract a crowd, as does the ice cream seller. One can also find clothing, local jewelers, imported fruit and vegetables, artisanal products such as soap and hand-turned wood, work by local artists, coffee and rum... Anywhere from 20 to 40 stands (depending on the month) are open from 8am to 12pm. The next Saint Barth Market takes place on Sunday, February 3, 2019.

Chilly?

Has this winter been especially cool in Saint Barthélemy? Not really. To date, the average temperature for the month of January is right on target: 23.2°C or 73.6°F. The thermostat has not gone above an average of 24.6 °C or 76.2°F by day, while the lowest temperature recorded was on January 2 at 21.8°C or 71.2°F. That is far from the lowest temperature on record, which was a cool 19.5 °C or 67.1°F on January 24, 1976. Rain fell only five days in January, compared to an average of 11.5 days, as calculated between 1981 and 2010.

SBIPOA Luncheon at Tamarin February 15

The Saint Barth International Property Owners Association is holding its annual fund-raising luncheon on Friday, February 15 at 12 noon at Tamarin, which is not open for lunch this season, but will be just for this special event. The cost is 100€ per person and the funds raised will be donated to FEMUR, an island organization that helps fund equipment needed for the De Bruyn Hospital in Gustavia, something that benefits islanders as well as visitors! Over the past 35years, FEMUR has raised funds for a wide range of medical equipment to help modernize the hospital. While this luncheon is not tax-deductible in the US, and must be paid in euros (cash or credit card), FEMUR is also a 501C3 charity in the States, so additional donations can be made in dollars to FEMUR and will be tax-deductible. For additional information or reservations, please email:secretarysbipoa@gmail.com

February 24, Half Marathon Solo or Relay

On Sunday, February 24, The Saint-Barth Triathlon Club is organizing the island's first half marathon of 21 km or 13.1 miles. It can be run by individuals or as 3 x 7 km relay. The start and finish will be at the stadium in St Jean, with the race going to Saline and Gustavia. The club is looking for volunteers to help with refreshment stations every 2.5 km and the safety of the runners. To lend a hand, call 06 90 63 53 70.

Hawaii At The Anglican Church

The 35th anniversary of the St Barth Music Festival concluded with a taste of Hawaii featuring two concerts by slack key guitarist Makana. On Sunday, January 20, it was standing room only at the Anglican Church, with listeners even crowding the steps outside. The festival also had good crowds for ballet, jazz, and opera soirées. Success For First Art & Food Market At Pati de St Barth

A Sunday market mixing food and art took place in Saint Barth on January 20, with brunch items cooked by chefs from some of the island's leading hotels, and art ateliers for kids and adults, as well as artists' work on display along with plants and vegan food by Alice. This first Art & Food Market, organized by the Artists of Saint Barth association at the Pati de St Barth boutique in Saint Jean (across from Villa Creole), was deemed a big success. The next such market will take place on Sunday, February 17 in the same location, 10am-2pm.

Saint Barth Dream: A Caribbean Art Destination

To add another dimension to the island's appeal, the Tourism Committee has put a focus on art, in association with the Artists of Saint-Barth. The first Art Week, February 4-9, is the fruit of this collaboration.

The island is the perfect place to be creative! As tiny as it is, Saint Barth attracts artists of all genres, who work in sculpture, painting, photography, wood... The Tourism Committee (CTTSB) sees this as an additional attraction for the island. "We would like to see art to play a key role in maintaining the loyalty of our upscale clientele, as well as place the island of Saint Barthélemy in a leading position as a top art destination in the Caribbean islands," says Nils Dufau, president of the CTTSB.

With this in mind, the first Art Week will be held on February 4-9, based on photography. The idea for the event is along the same lines as the Gourmet Festival: five exhibits, each at a luxury hotel for a week, with a special event each evening at which the artist can meet the public and present his work.

"We are always looking for other things to show tourists than just our beaches," says Marie-Laure Belzic, director of the CTTSB. Naturally, she turned to the Artists of Saint-Barth, an association that organizes Pop Up Art Parties at the Christopher Hotel and other island locations. These events attract hundreds of people, residents as well as visitors. "That's what creates the charm of Saint Barthélemy. We would like to keep it like that, where residents and tourists mix."

Emmanuel Leprince and Marie-Laure Belzic.

Antoine Verglas, Patron Photographer

The first Saint Barth Art Week was announced during a gala dinner hosted by the CTTSB in Paris in December. Photographer Antoine Verglas was named patron of the event: "Photography is mature and diverse enough in Saint Barth to warrant its own event, presenting high-quality photographers whose work is complementary," he notes. That is also the modus operandi for Artists of Saint-Barth, as represented by director Emmanuel Leprince: "I insist that the all of the exhibits are of high quality." Thus year, photography is in the spotlight, "but we would like to support different disciplines for each edition," points out Marie Laure Belzic.

This artistic spirit is growing on the island, from Art Parties to Art Week, and the second annual Photo Festival planned for this summer, not to mention the exhibits at the Territorial Museum, which have expanded from year to year.

"St Barthélemy is already renowned for its beaches, villas, and hotels. It is now equally regarded for its artistic creation, with a spirit of healthy competition and an active market with buyers among the owners of villas on the island and visitors who appreciate contemporary art. This vitality is what Art Week hopes to capture by presenting an exceptional experience in an exceptional place," adds jeweler Fabienne Miot.

The organizers hope that Art Week will become an annual event as successful as the Gourmet Festival has become. "Something new to add to our calendar, hoping it becomes an important event that allows us to accent the attractiveness of the island through art... The art of being an island," concludes Nils Dufau.

The Ball Is Rolling

Pati Guyot, who arrived in Saint Barth in 1983, has been an artist since childhood. She has observed and been part of the art movement on the island. In an annex of her French West Indies boutique in St Jean, she houses a mini art gallery, 100% local.

The island has really changed since 1983, the year that Pati Guyot arrived in Saint Barthélemy. “When I got here, there were very few artists, but they were very good,” she recalls. “We formed a small collective and displayed our work where we could, that is to say in very few places.... We borrowed a large space in Gustavia, which was great. But as the years went by, it became more complicated to show our work. Art galleries opened but generally showed artists from the exterior. And it is hard to make a gallery successful, especially with little-known artists...” As a result, the collective disappeared little-by-little.

Today, the Artists of Saint-Barth association, which has 50 members including Pati, rents an annex at her French West Indies boutique in Saint Jean. This mini gallery is as much a meeting place as an exhibit space. And the back deck allows for outside events, such as the Art & Food Market, the first one of which was held on January 20. Small but visible, thanks to the art that adorn the facade, Pati’s gallery attracts the attention of the many tourists who stop to take a look. And if folks like Doug Barrowman are rare—he decorated his entire villa with art from Saint Barth, investing several hundred thousand euros (as reported in the Journal de St Barth #1290)—more and more tourists and art connoisseurs appreciate and purchase work by local artists.

Is Saint Barthélemy particularly inspiring? “In my opinion, if there are so many artists, it’s maybe due to a slight lack of cultural activities. Other than the beaches and a few places to hike, you have to find something to do. And since the island is so beautiful, it incites artistic creation. The décor is as good as it gets,” says Pati, who notes that it seems a no-brainer to develop the artistic facet of the island. “What would really be interesting would be to create an artistic movement native to Saint Barth, like there was in Haiti at one time. People get together and that creates cross-fertilization, stimulates creativity. Today, I think that the ball is rolling. With enough support, the art movement is growing in magnitude. And will allow us to attract people who are interested in art, that is to say, an upscale, cultivated clientele.”

Five Exhibits in Five Five-Star Hotels

The upcoming Art Week showcases photography, much as the Gourmet Festival in November showcases food. This time, five exhibits will run concurrently for a week, each at a different luxury hotel. And every evening from February 4 thru 9, a special event will focus on one of the five participating artists.

Virgin Island

One can barely recognize Saint Barthélemy in the images by Michael Gramm, as his view of the island seems to be natural, wild, almost uninhabited! Profound work that condenses the rugged nature of Saint Barthélemy is a treat for the eyes.

Fifty Shades Of Turquoise

Fifty shades of turquoise in the waters of the Caribbean as seen through the lens of Pierre Carreau. Specializing in photos of nautical sports, he will present his Turquoise series, as well as a selection of his best shots from the Bucket Regatta. Active and majestic!

Intimate Waters

The sea and ocean around Saint Barth seen in a new light: abstract and in a very large format, they take on a wild and mystical dimension. Fanxi Delarue, originally from Inner Mongolia, China, explores the architecture of the sea.

> Water Nymphs In The Tropics

Many people who visit Saint Barth have already seen the work of Antoine Verglas: easily identifiable, his black and white images often feature nude women in tropical landscapes. For this exhibit, he is showing his work as a series of triptychs, which “dress” the women in the center of these tableaux.

Out Of His Shell

The shell museum of Corossol is reborn in this exhibit by photographer Laurent Benoit, who came to Saint Barth 22 years ago as a diving instructor. He enhances local shells with images taken in a soft bath of natural light, without artifice.

Part Of Sales To Finance
“New Talents” Grant

The photographs on display during Art Week are all for sale, with prices ranging from 500€ to 2,000€, and 10% of all sales helping to finance a “New Talents” grant. The Rotary Club of Saint Barthélemy will double every euro raised, and the funds will be presented to an emerging photographer on the island, as selected by a jury. “We want to support amateur talents, no matter their age, who would like to take the next step in their careers,” notes Marie-Laure Belzic. This money could, for example, help a photographer frame a group of images for an exhibit.
