COVID IN THE SUN?

We Are Very Lucky!

Saint Barth is a magic island in a lot of ways, and has always had a strong attraction in spite of its drawbacks, such as a lack of any sources of fresh water. As one of the few tourist destinations currently open to American travelers, Saint Barth was hopping over the holidays, as they say, the joint was jumping. Sadly, a lot of the Covid-19 health precautions were thrown out the window, or into the sea, and people were partying like there wasn't a worldwide pandemic all around us. A few restaurants have been closed, notably Nikki Beach, where several staff members tested positive after the New Year's festivities. Please be careful, as of January 26, 2021, all US residents need a negative PCR or antigen test to return home, so you don't want to end up in quarantine here. And when the French prime minister announced a 6pm curfew for all of France, Saint Barth was spared... for now...so please help us keep it that way!

In the meantime, Saint Barth is still a little slice of paradise, where luxury reigns, and one can buy such exclusive items as conch pearl or have a renowned artist such as Victor Matthews paint a mural for your villa. And two new eateries in Gustavia add to the gourmet experience, both with a taste of nature: extraordinary pastries at Sin Garden with a large interior tree (faux), and a touch of St Tropez at La Petite Plage, where sand on the floor creates a beach-like ambiance.

Enjoy your vacation, unlike the Canadian politician who was forced to resign after sneaking off to Saint Barth, while his province was in lockdown.

Ah, the charm of the island....

The Coronavirus Active In The Northern Islands

The Covid-19 epidemic has spiked in Saint Barthélemy. French Public Health reported 43 positive cases from January 4-10 in Saint Barthélemy and 33 new cases from January 11-15. A total of 281 cases of Covid-19 have been confirmed on the island since the beginning of the epidemic. Eight clusters are under investigation by the health authorities.

As of January 18, antigen tests are no longer accepted for travelers coming to Saint Barthélemy. A PCR test is required less than 72 hours before flying, for all travelers over 11 years old. This new travel advisory resulted from announcements made by French prime minister Jean Castex, to help reinforce sanitary measures in France. The prefecture for Saint Barthélemy also very strongly recommends a preventative seven-day quarantine period for all travelers arriving on the island (honor system), plus another test after the seven days.

Administrative Closing Of Nikki Beach

An important cluster was detected at Nikki Beach after the New Year, and before December 31 the gendarmes had observed that social distancing was not being respected there. In this context, the Prefecture enacted an administrative closing, which began on January 15 and continues for one week.

As soon as staff members started to show symptoms as of January 6, the management decided to close this beachfront restaurant and test all of the personnel. This is the fifth place open to the public to be sanctioned since mid-November.

New Rules For Travel To The USA

As of January 26, 2021, all travelers (two years and older) going to the United States, including American citizens, must present a negative Covid-19 test, PCR or antigen, taken within three days before their flight to the US departs, and provide written documentation of their laboratory test result (paper or electronic copy) to the airline, or provide documentation of having recovered from COVID-19. Airlines must confirm the negative test result for all passengers or documentation of recovery before they board. If a passenger does not provide documentation of a negative test or recovery, or chooses not to take a test, the airline must deny boarding to the passenger. The new rule includes US citizens and legal permanent residents. In St Barth, tests can be done at the testing center on the parking lot in St Jean or the medical lab in Gustavia.

A Tycoon Comes To The Aid Of The Ocean

Hundreds of kilos of fishnets removed from the sea and along the rocks in Grand-Fond: That’s what American businessman David MacNeil, his family, and his yacht crew did during their stay in Saint Barthélemy. Founder and CEO of WeatherTech, MacNeil owns a villa in Saint Barth and the 58-meter (190’) mega yacht W.

Grand-Fond Project Continues Thru April 30

A small path along the waterfront with benches to sit and watch the sea, informational signage created by the Territorial Environmental Agency, six parking places, a drop-off spot, and access for people with limited mobility: all on the drawing board for the road in Grand-Fond, with the project expected to be finished by May. In the meantime, traffic will be impacted by the work until Friday, April 30, during which time the roadway is narrower, and parking is prohibited.

Help Translate At The Lab

As there are many English-speaking people seeking Covid-19 tests at the medical lab in Gustavia, a few people are needed to help translate and fill out paperwork in advance to save time. If you are interested in lending a helping hand as a Community Service Volunteer, please email Donna Cohen at donnacohen@comstbarth.com

The Réserve Naturelle: Violations Still Abound

Within the Réserve Naturelle de Saint Barthélemy, jet-skis and all motorized watercraft are prohibited, as is mooring of all boats over 20 tons or longer than 25 meters. In 2020, close to half of the fines given by the Territorial Environmental Agency (ATE) were in violation of these rules. Also subject to fines are activities such as electric surfboards, speeding in the bays of Colombier and Forchue, and fishing. In 2020, the agents of the ATE issued 50 fines, compared to 59 the year before, even in spite of the lockdown.

SBIPOA General Meeting

The Saint Barth International Property Owners Association will hold its first 2021 general membership meeting on Thursday, January 21 at 5pm via zoom. International homeowners and long-term renters interested in joining the association, please email: SecretarySBIPOA@gmail.com

Canadian Politician Resigns After Saint Barth Vacation

The finance minister of Ontario, Canada, resigned after it was revealed he had flown to Saint Barth on vacation. While the residents of his province had been asked to stay at home and not take international vacations, he tried to cover up his holiday. During a videoconference, he was careful to put a virtual background of Toronto behind him... but the sound of the waves could be heard! To share his Christmas message, the politician appeared next to a fireplace, and on his Twitter account, he posted photos hard at work in Canada. “I made a serious error in judgement,” admitted Rod Phillips after his trip.

The Rotary Club’s “Round Up Your Euro” Project

The idea is simple: when you check out of one of the AMC grocery stores, they will ask you if you want to round up the total to the nearest euro, all to benefit the non-profit association HandiBarth. This is a project run by the local Rotary Club thru January 24 to help finance the professionals who help those who are sick, handicapped, or elderly for several hours at a time, giving the family and other caregivers a little time off. Members of the Rotary Club will be present in the stores to explain the idea to customers.

INCLUDING A SHELTER IN YOUR WEALTH MANAGEMENT STRATEGY

By Emmanuel Jacques, MBA — Expert in Negotiation Worldwide

When the COVID-19 pandemic occurred, people discovered that there is no safe place on earth. Climate change's increasing effects will soon confirm that today's world is dramatically different from the one that existed when we were born. Before, everyone believed that living in a big city, close to a hospital, was enough to ensure their family's safety. Today, this belief is being called into question. In the event of any crisis whatsoever, the overpopulation and the centralization of the heat and the air conditioning systems, as well as mandatory public transportation, make any escape from a collective threat almost impossible.

Many smart people understood this, so they decided to live in safer locations during the coronavirus lockdowns. It was a good move. So, why not invest in a shelter?

Here are some criteria to consider before you invest in a shelter:

Accessibility:

Can I reach my shelter easily? What can happen on the way to my shelter? How long will it take me to complete this journey? How many people can I travel with? Do I need a visa?

You must be able to reach your shelter in less than one day in whatever circumstances.

History:

What are the track records of the people who live where I decide to locate my shelter in a difficult time? How do they generally react to strangers? How did they behave in the past? Were they hostile or friendly? Between them, were they hospitable or violent?

Obviously, you should avoid hostile places.

Catering:

Will I find resources to live a normal life? What will be my everyday life be like?

Don't forget that you never know how long it will last.

Medical infrastructure:

Are there any hospitals? Good doctors? Will they be able to treat my disease (if I have one)? Will they have the resources to cure many patients at the same time?

You should seek a place that is safer than the one you will leave.

Management of issues:

Will I find all telecommunication facilities in good condition to remain connected with my employees and relatives? Can I transmit bank orders from this territory? Can I access my company's online network?

You will not leave if you know that you will find your life upside down when you return.

Quarantine and returning:

Does my country have special ties with my shelter territory? Will I need special authorizations to go back and forth? Who will provide them? Where is this authority located? Will my mode of transportation still be operable after the crisis?

You should secure your return before leaving.

Maintaining costs:

Are they high? Can I rent my shelter sometimes to pay the maintenance costs? Is this long-term investment good or bad?

Because you should put your money only into profitable assets.

This checklist provides you with the main criteria that you need to meet. When you have completed it, you will discover that there are very few places on earth that can match your personal criteria. These are the places where you should invest.

Jordan Manasse: “When I sit down, I look forward to making people smile.”

Many talented musicians perform during the St Barth Music Festival. But few are as young as Jordan Manasse. The 14-year-old New Yorker has already given performances at various events and won numerous competitions. Le Journal de St Barth spoke with the young pianist before the 37th St Barth Music Festival.

Can you please introduce yourself?

My name is Jordan Manasse, I am 14 years-old and from New York. I started playing the piano at the age of three and had my first lessons with my teacher the following year.

Where have you previously performed?

I've previously performed at music camps, in trios on Long Island, and during competitions as well.

Is this your first time in Saint Barth?

This is actually my third time performing in Saint Barth. The last two times I was here was also during the Saint Barth Music Festival.

This theme for this year's Music Festival is love. How do you incorporate that into your performance?

When I sit down, I look forward to making people smile and share the love I have for the piece, and the really deep love I have for my instrument, which I think is important for an artist. Otherwise, how can I share something I don't have?

How do you manage to succeed both academically and in your art?

I usually plan out time to practice piano after school. When I come home, I do my homework. Then I take a healthy break and after that I start practicing.

Do you have a favorite piece?

The Black Keys Etude by Chopin—it's so exciting and fun to play.

What do you like about Saint Barth?

I just love being out of the city. It's refreshing to be surrounded by nature and animals you don't get to see otherwise. And people are so welcoming here.

How do you feel before a performance?

I'm slightly nervous, but I know that practice makes perfect. I'm also very excited to perform. It's a mix of emotions. I usually practice self-care before a concert to be both mentally and physically relaxed.

If you could perform with one artist, who would you choose?

I would probably pick the American violinist, Hillary Hahn. She is so talented, I would love to perform a piece with her.

The Beauty of Conch Pearls

We have all admired the beautiful pearls created by oysters, but are less knowledgeable about those found or cultivated in conch, a tropical mollusk whose large spiraled shells have a lustrous pink interior. But Sébastien Meygret and Laurence Frigeri are experts on the subject.

For some time, certain West Indian islands have forbidden fishing for conch. That is not the case in Saint Barthélemy, as explained by Sébastien Gréaux, director of the Territorial Environmental Agency: “Saint Barthélemy has its own regulations in terms of fishing. As long as we don’t see a drastic reduction in the conch population, there is no reason to forbid its fishing. However, only professionals are allowed to capture conch.” Which is why Sébastien Meygret and Laurence Frigeri regularly purchased their conch from a local fisherman. But then they came up with another solution. They now cultivate conch in pools; but how they feed them remains a guarded secret. These mollusks can reproduce in a quasi-naturel milieu and in optimal conditions. As a result, their pearls are of an optimum quality.

The conch is the only mollusk in the Caribbean to produce a pearl.

Meygret and Frigeri are totally devoted to the raising of conch. After trying in Honduras, they moved their project to Saint Martin in 2013 and made sure to have enough land for the cultivation of these mollusks. In 2015, the French Gemology Laboratory certified their label as “cultured pearls” and they were officially recognized during a conference on pearls in Paris that same year. Conch pearls are set apart by the fact that they are non-nacreous, in comparison to pearls from oysters. Not to mention that the conch is the only mollusk in the Caribbean to produce a pearl. This is what makes them so rare.

As far as jewelry is concerned, the pearls are certainly the center of attention but are not the only part of the shellfish that is used. In fact, the conch shell itself, with its pink lining, is also very trendy, as explained by Fabienne Miot, a jewelry designer with a shop on the rue de la République in Gustavia: “I think what Laurence and Sébastien are doing is very pertinent as it is unique. Harvesting conch is very regulated, and it’s good that the Northern Islands have approved this project.” Miot has already worked with this lustrous shell, as well as set conch pearls for her clients.

The value of a conch pearl is counted in carats, like diamonds. The market price for a fifth of a carat is about 1,000€. Set pieces or custom designs sell for as much as 9,000€. Each of their pearls comes with a certificate of authenticity on which Meygret and Frigeri add their handwritten signatures. This paper serves as a passport, which is obligatory as long as the cultivation of these mollusks is regulated.

It is in Terres-Basses, in Saint-Martin, that the fish farm of Laurence Frigeri and Sébastien Meygret is located.

Shades Of White And Beige: Custom Murals

By Victor Matthews

Represented in Saint Barth by Space Gallery in Gustavia, American artist Victor Matthews spends time in Saint Barth every winter, having first come to the island over 30 years ago. With roots in the 1980's New York City street-art movement, Matthews painted murals in Soho alongside Keith Haring and Jean-Michel Basquiat.

Currently on the island, Matthews is working on a custom fresco for a client at their villa in Gustavia. "It is the third of such projects, and in the tradition of fresco he paints on the walls directly in his signature whites and beiges, using imagery from his island Utopia series to create a unique work that adorns the walls of the home," explains Nathalie Clifford, partner/director of Space Gallery. "The work is at the same time soft and striking. Victor is on the island through to early March and anyone wanting to have a consultation for a similar project should contact Space Gallery. Additionally, they should contact us for details of available work on paper and canvas. His works are elegant and compelling."

Matthew's work has been exhibited both domestically and internationally including the Venice Biennale. His paintings are found in the permanent collections of the Los Angeles County Museum of Art (LACMA) and the Boca Raton Museum of Art, and he counts music mogul Jay-Z, literary icon Salman Rushdie, Hollywood elites Forest Whitaker and Ellen DeGeneres, and artists Brice and Helen Martin amongst his most devoted collectors and patrons.

New Gourmet Experiences In Gustavia

An extraordinary pastry shop and a taste of St Tropez are the newest additions to the culinary scene in Gustavia: Sin Garden and La Petite Plage, both along the waterfront, just a few steps from each other at the far end of the port, the latest foodie hotspot.

When it comes to sinful sweets, Sin Garden lives up to its name. Created by Djordje Varda, this charming shop features flaky croissants and pain au chocolate by Belgian pastry chef Marine Urbaine, but that is just the beginning of the sinful treats beckoning to be sampled. Here forte is trompe l'oeil fantasy, and if you were to squeeze the mango to see if it were ripe, you'd be surprised to find it is indeed the work of a master chef, filled with cream and mousse and pieces of real mango. Coffee, tea, champagne, cakes, eclairs, and myriad delectable delights await under the large faux tree that reigns over the interior and reflects Varda's incredible floral designs.

For dinner by the dock, wander across the street to La Petite Plage, the Saint Barth version of the restaurant by the same name in St Tropez. The attraction here is an indoor beach feel, with sand on the floor to accent the charming wood and wicker décor. Chef Alexandre Delage's cuisine takes on an international air with Creole accents, featuring specialties ranging from quick-seared tuna to grilled fish, topped by a baba au rum. Cocktails are served on the terrace, where casual seating provides a great view of the port. Then as night falls, music takes over to enhance the mood and create a different ambiance for a festive Saint Barth night.
